AAA Interest Groups are mechanisms for creating networks of AAA members sharing interests in an important anthropological intellectual and/or professional issue(s) or concern(s). By design, an Interest Group is more informal and more limited in its potential range of activities than an AAA Section. The intention is to provide AAA members a simple, informal vehicle for coming together to discuss, exchange information, advance some common interests or concerns not falling within the purview of an existing Section. Interest Groups are temporary entities, continuing only so long as there is demonstrated sufficient interest in the topic. An Interest Group will be authorized for three years at a time, and may apply for reauthorization as many times as sufficient interest can be demonstrated.

Further, Interest Groups are creations of and exist at the discretion of the AAA, and are subordinate in every way to the Association. For example, an Interest Group may not make public statements, sign contracts, or make unapproved commitments (which are true of any Section, committee, commission or Task Force of the Association.)

Membership in an Interest Group is open to all dues-paying members of the AAA; there are no additional dues required for joining an interest group.

Specific information regarding membership requirements and benefits to any AAA Interest Group, including news of specific relevance to its members are to be found online through their website. Special Interest group members are encouraged to visit the AAA online at <http://www.aaanet.org/sections/interestgroups.cfm> for a directory of special interest group websites.
